

A KEEPSAKE FOR YOUR FUTURE SELVES

An Anniversary Letter

Write this together before the wedding. Seal it. Open it on an anniversary that needs it.

The best weddings aren't the most extravagant — they're the most intentional. This is one small, intentional thing you can do right now, before the busyness of planning takes over: write a letter to the two of you, a few years from now. Answer honestly. Don't try to sound wise. Seal it in an envelope, write a date on the front, and open it together when that day comes.

To be opened on our _____ anniversary

Today's date: _____ Our wedding date: _____

Right now, the thing I love most about you is...

My favorite memory of us so far is...

Something I hope we never stop doing together is...

A challenge I think we're facing right now, that I hope we've grown through by the time you read this, is...

A promise I want to make to you, starting today, is...

When I picture us on this future anniversary, I hope we...

One more thing I want you to know...

YOUR TURN

A Few Lines From Each of You

Sign and date below, then seal this letter away.

Partner One

Signed, _____ Date: _____

Partner Two

Signed, _____ Date: _____

Peace begins when preparation gives way to presence. Put this letter somewhere safe — tucked into your journal, a keepsake box, or with a trusted friend or family member — until the anniversary you named above.